Lessons in the HeArt and Science of Resiliency from the Aspen Tree : Weaving Webs of Wholeness in a Fragmented World

We arrive into the great work of our lives and times as we ask the questions, Who am I? and What is it to be human? Purpose and meaning and the structure of our lives and culture grow out of the answers we provide. Our answers to these questions both unite us and divide us. Yet to answer these questions of identity, without seeking the counsel and wild wisdom of Nature, is to live in the decaying bubble of human separation: separation from Nature, from our selves, from each other and from the mystery of the cosmos itself. The great work of our times is to come home to our Selves, to again discover our belonging within the great web of Life, personally and collectively. The Aspen grove and tree, perhaps the world's largest individual organism, offers us a primeval and imaginative window into our own deep identity, into a dynamic vision of a world of thrive-ability. As soul medicine for our times, aspens reveal the dimensional nature of the Self and of Community. They invite us into the vigorous experience and knowledge of our wholeness. This is a radical affirmation of the heart of resiliency; it is the moist intimacy of relational intelligence, of existential courage and of our Oneness in celebration of diversity. This experiential program is a frolicking reflective, provocative and inspiring exploration of the wholeness of who we are as human beings. We will interweave a poetic tapestry of ecology, biology, neurobiology, resiliency science and mythology with a dash of quantum physics for spice.

Larry Glover, LISW, is the Founder/Director of The Wild Resiliency Institute (www.wildresiliency.com). Larry, as a youth, once walked alone into a remote wilderness determined to either die or to come out a different man. Wild Resiliency arises out of that experience, and out of converging careers as an international organizational learning coach, forest fire fighter, wilderness guide and leader and as a human change professional. He has worked professionally with individuals and groups in wilderness settings since 1980. He co-creatively partners with visionary individuals and organizations for our evolutionary journey into a more beautiful world — a world in harmony with the wholeness of our Being.
